

APES' TEA PARTY.

It was the apes' day out near the Alster Lake, in Germany. All four were going to have lunch at a real restaurant. Upon the owner rested responsibility for good behaviour. And what a hope he had. Still, he doesn't look at all worried. He's been in charge of the gang long enough to be prepared for anything. Manners maketh money.

How about a little drink?

If they don't behave better they'll get ticked off by the Professor.

It begins to look as if they'd all had a drop too much.

All good pals and jelly good company.