HAWAII: VOLCANO ERUPTS AGAIN.

Lava was flung into the air from a line of craters a mile-and-a-half long, when the Hawaiian volcano broke out again. Weeks ago, the first eruption was so unalarming that it was little more than a tourist attraction. This time the lava has burnt up hundreds of acres growing valuable crops and menaced a large village.

As the molten rock reached the sea it threw up dense clouds of steam and smoke. As Hawaii is now the 50th State of the Union, she qualifies for help from America, which is one consolation in this time of distress.
