

RHEE QUIT.

President Rhee has gone from the political scene; thrust out by the revolt of the people. It amounts to revolution in Southern Korea. Even while thousands mourned in Seoul, the Capital, Syngman Rhee turned his police on the rebels, and thought he could ride the storm. In a lifetime of struggle he'd always come-out-on-top. This time, the grief was too deep; the people could stand no more. On the eve of the old President's surrender, feeling in Parliament ran high.

Rhee's henchmen still tried to wrench triumph from near-disaster. Then came the news that the hated Vice-President, his wife and sons had died in a suicide-pact. Rhee himself resigned. But as we go to press the old man's luck has not quite run out: he is still alive.
