

ROYAL KARIBA DAM.

On her arrival at Gwelo, Rhodesia, at the start of her second week in the Federation, the Queen Mother was given a tremendous welcome. She was there to attend an Indaba, a tribal gathering of native chiefs, and how they greeted her.

The dancing to say the least, spectacular and certainly exciting was performed on the eve of the royal opening of the Kariba Dam.

He's almost good enough to play for Real Madrid.

The mighty Kariba Dam, already acclaimed as one of the wonders of the world. Holding back the Zambesi River this £80,000,000 masterpiece of engineering skill was to be set in operation by Her Majesty. Her arrival was acknowledged by a crowd of 3,000.

What a moment this was in the history of the Central African Federation. As the Queen Mother said, "Kariba marks a new era in the economic life of the Rhodesias. It will generate power for the rapidly growing industries of this potentially-enormously rich territory.

The lake, as long as London to Exeter, in places 40 miles wide, impounds the immense mass of water which Kariba will convert into electric power.
