JAPS AND IKE - LATEST.

Japan's getting worked up about the visit of President Eisenhower. A snake dance outside the U.S. Embassy was the Left Wingers' way of protesting against it, and against the U.S.-Japanese defence Treaty. Outside Premier Kishi's house it looked like becoming rowdy; especially when they tore open the gates.

Somebody dialled the Jap version of 999 and along came the police. It's becoming a regular thing in Tokyo.

Ike himself remains calm. At West Point (America's Sandhurst) he met veterans who were cadets there with him, way back in 1915. And if they think they're veterans, what about General Henry Clay Hodges, aged 100, he made the others feel juvenile.

West Point likes Ike.
