

SILVERSTONE GRAND PRIX.

The big day of British motor racing - the Grand Prix at Silverstone. World champion Jack Brabham's ready - and a very welcome sight is Stirling Moss, who's flown from hospital to start the race everyone wishes he was driving in.

Stirling gets them away - all except Graham Hill's B.R.M. which stalls!

But the pit boys soon get him started, and he seems all the more determined, because to the delight of the crowd, he's soon up among the leaders, chasing after Jack Brabham for all he's worth.

Brabham's Cooper-Climax, well in front... But Hill's driving like a genius, better than he's ever done - and a terrific battle with Brabham puts him ahead.

John Surtees well up, too - but Hill's spun off the course, and Jack Brabham's the winner, with Surtees second! Tough luck on Hill, but he's not hurt. And for Australian Jack Brabham - this means he's practically certain to retain the world championship in 1960. Earl Howe presents the British Grand Prix trophy to the victor - one more for an overcrowded mantelpiece!
