

CALGARY STAMPELE.

Premier John Diefenbaker arrives in Calgary for its big annual rodeo, the Stampede. So do Bing Crosby, and 140,000 other people - including a tribe of Blackfoot Indians, with whom Mr. Diefenbaker has an important date. He's about to be made an honorary chief.

And his Blackfoot title - "Chief Peacemaker". But there's nothing very peaceful about the big show.

There doesn't seem much future in this as a form of transport. Some of them can't even get started.

Leading cowboys from all over North America come to Calgary just for the privilege of biting the dust before an appreciative public. And they do seem to enjoy it - even if the whole thing is really just a lot of bull.

This is called "selling the dummy". On the whole, it's safer to walk - if you still can.
