

RIGHT FURS TIME!

One fur-coat doesn't make a winter, but when the National Fur Company showed its Winter Collection, husbands reached for their chequebooks. For £495, a handsome coat of monkey fur. Note, by the way, that the fur-trade is brisk in Britain, always a sign that business is good all round. Forgetting the modest monkey, in the £3,545-class a superb Tourmaline Mink. Ilona is also wearing jewellery worth £2,500. It shows, girls, how careful you should be to go to the altar with the right man.

Land yourself with an everyday sort of chap, and it'll have to be (say) an Arabian Lamb at less than 200.

Quick: Let's get back to class. A Blue Iris Sapphire Mink, hitting the bank balance a left hook of £3,750. And that's only a tenth of it. The jewellery this time is worth £40,000. About 90 carefully chosen Mink skins went to the making of this marvellous coat. If you were a mink, would-st you curse these modern expense accounts?
