

ENGLAND V. WALES.

Wales kicked off at Wembley and Woosnam was soon prominent for them at inside right. Perhaps it was to be a match of real brilliance by the inside forwards. But it was England's turn first. Centre-forward Bobby Smith had possession. On to Greaves and the wonder-man of Chelsea was too quick for Kelsey's dive.

Cliff Jones tried to retaliate, and it was a close shave.

A goal up in two minutes, England attacked again. There was no holding these forwards, even on the sodden pitch. Bobby Charlton made no mistake. Two for England.

On the mid England were faring better than their opponents. Bobby Smith passed to the right and again it looked dangerous for Wales, as the ball come back into the middle, for a grand header by Smith to get the third goal. England led 3-11, and that was the score at half-time.

England pressed at once. So far their inspiring captain, Johnny Haynes hadn't scored. But watch him now as he gets number four.

On came England again, Douglas on the warpath. A tremendous save by Kelsey.

Welsh outside right Medwin beat left-back McNeil. It looked promising for Wales, but they had no luck.

England nearly got the fifth goal after a Kelsey save. Smith charged, but the Welsh goalkeeper was convinced that the ball hadn't crossed the line. The referee agreed.

Greaves dangerous again. And yes, it was in the net.

England five. Wales deserved a goal and were determined to get one before full time. And spurred on by supporters they tested Hodgkinson. The goalkeeper was uncertain and Leek shot the one and only Welsh goal. No keeping out any Welshmen with the name of Leek.