

MR. ZARB RELEASED.

A Comet-4 brought to London Airport James Zarb, released from Egyptian imprisonment. Elda Zarb and her children were there to meet him; so, apparently, were a substantial cross-section of the London Press. Mr. Zarb and his wife could hardly believe that at last he was a free man, so sudden was his release from captivity. He served 4-and-a-half years of his ten-year sentence on a charge of espionage. With what joy were he and the family reunited. But before he could go home he was meeting, in the conference room, newsreels, radio, TV - the lot.
