

RIOTS OVER S. TYROL

Outside the Austrian Embassy it was evident that students in Rome take international politics seriously. Police persuasion failed, and before long there was a real riot.

The cause of it all was that apparently peaceful region, South Tyrol. Austria is asking the United Nations to investigate the Italian administration there. It's believed that the students are Fascists, determined that nobody's going to interfere in the Italian Tyrol.

Italian blood was really up. If there'd been a United Nations force on the spot, it would have been the sort of thing they're used to nowadays. There'd be no Austrian independence in the Italian South Tyrol, if the students could help it. Hospital cases, 20-odd, 40 arrested.
