

COLLEGE FOR TRADES

The Toast Rack is the name they have given the new college building; and hotel cookery is just one of the many trades taught at this up-to-the-minute establishment in Manchester. Up North they realise that this is the age of the well-trained worker, waiters, (men and women) included. When the meal's ready and to the liking of the instructor-chef, the guinea-pigs in the restaurant are very happy to sample both the cooking and service. And as the 3-course lunch, plus coffee, only costs 4/6, there's always a crowd.

As the manufacture of men's and women's clothing looms large in Manchester, there's competition to get places in the classes.

More guinea-pigs. This time to sample the work of the student-hairdressers. The bait that pulls the public in here is price again. For a shampoo and set the charge is only 1/-. That's nothing, you can get a permanent-wave for half a crown...So why not take the train to Manchester and have a slap-up lunch and hair-do? You'd be well in pocket.
