LOOK OUT, ALL TANKS

PATHE NEWS: 61/55

It looks like good news for infantrymen, not so good for tanks. The Vickers Vigilant anti-tank guided missile can hit the target with near certainty at all ranges from 200 yards to a mile. If it's everything it appears to be, tank supremacy in conventional warfare may be over.

The Vigilant can be carried by one man and set up in 20 seconds. Under good cover it can be concealed from its intended victim.

Aligned in approximately the right direction, it requires to be connected by the cable to the pistol grip control unit. The operator gets the target in his sights and the missile's away, being guided to the tank.

It's come to the point where tank crews will be asking for danger money.
