TONY OPENS ART SHOW

Mr. Antony Armstrong-Jones went to Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum, to open an exhibition of Scottish Painting. Many people were puzzled, that he was not yet referred to as the Earl of Snowdon. That will have to wait for a few days, till the Letters Patent are granted. Meanwhile he was full of praise for the pictures.

The Highland Chieftain; a 17th century picture. Also typically Scottish, Dr. Ralph Wardlaw, Professor of Theology. When Mr. Armstrong-Jones left the Exhibition he joined Princess Margaret's train, which brought them to King's Cross next morning. Many people on their way to work spotted her luggage, an indication that a little later on the Princess and Her Husband would be coming off the train, back home after the holiday in Scotland. And how well she looked.

By no means was this an ordinary homecoming. Before long, the Princess will become a mother, an event which will endear her still more to the millions in whose hearts she already has a very warm place.
