

PRESIDENT SEES GLENN

At Colonel Glenn's home in Arlington it's winter, very different from Cape Canaveral. But even when relaxing, the astronaut and his family can't keep out of the public eye, and he's obliging to everybody, while waiting for the attempt to orbit the earth.

Glenn was honoured with an invitation to the White House for a chat with the President. He told Mr. Kennedy there was too much personal publicity; not enough about the scientific side of the orbit. The President said, that that is modern life. People in the news just have to put up with it. After all, he should know.