

IDEAL HOME EXHIBITION.

That universal dream, the ideal home, will be drawing at least a million people to Olympia in the next few weeks. The famous Daily Mail Exhibition showing everything from private swimming pools to corkscrews has become a feature of London in the early Spring. The Whirl-O-Wash is portable, sells for £9 and is ideal for caravans and bachelor homes. As an alternative to having a good old gossip at the launderette, it's got something.

No home is ideal if your figure's got completely out of control. The lissomrest takes off the unwanted inches without dieting or going to a masseuse.

The radiat heat Foldaway cooker makes no smoke, smell or splattering. It's portable, so can be used in any room, or at a friend's house if you don't like their cooking. An idea from Norway. A log house which can be entered if you come home late, have have lost your key and don't want anyone to know.

The insulation afforded by timber walls five inches thick is better than can be obtained by eleven-inch cavity-brick. The A-line vacation home, so called because the end resembles the letter A, is a packaged frame house of cedar wood. It has a living room, bedroom and kitchen. An attractive second home. Now, imagine that you had your wish, a beautiful house just where you would like to be. Well here it is, the house in the sun, in a Caribbean setting. You could run a bath and watch T.V., without getting out of bed. Sir Malcolm Sergent's ideas inspired the living room.

Valerie Hobson designed the kitchen.

It's a glorious dream. Come in out of the London cold, and there you are, in the Caribbean. Well, of course, if may happen.
