ZOO BABY MEETS PRESS

Perhaps you can't always tell by expression, but who'd think that Toli is one of the world's happy mothers? She ought to be, because Baby Bulu, who seems to have inherited the slightly mournful look, is the first orang-utan to be reared in captivity in this country. Mother Toli was a present from Borneo to the London Zoo eight years ago. Maybe she pines for her native land. In this place she can't even brush her baby's hair. It was Bulu's first birthday when we took these pictures. Toli seems to believe in the virtues of the old-fashioned scrubbing brush. If she tries it on you, Bulu, don't stand for it.
