QUEEN IN SCOTLAND

Her Majesty was visiting the Scottish Capital. Lord Provost Sir John Greig Dunbar surrendered the keys of Edinburgh, in the time-honoured ceremony observed on the arrival of a monarch. The First Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders provided the Guard of Honour, both at the station and afterwards when the Queen and Duke arrived at the Palace of Holyrood House.

Later, in the Forecourt of the Palace, a display of Scottish Dancing.

After the display both the Queen and Prince Philip congratulated the performers. Royal duties allow much less time in Edinburgh than Her Majesty would like, but a crowded programme ensured that the best use was made of the few days which she and the Duke were spending in the historic and beautiful capital of Scotland.
