

IRISH PRO. CATCHES 'EM YOUNG

Ireland's juniors take over Portmarnock golf links. At this famed course near Dublin, that well-known golfer Eddie Hackett, is running a school that has made him the most popular master on record. By teaching these youngsters the "Hackett" style, Eddie is building up a first line reserve of up-and-coming players that will maintain the Emerald Island's front rank position in golf. This is Michael Gill. Remember the name! He may be the Bradshaw of the day-after-tomorrow.

Now, Joe McMenamin steps into the fray for that most difficult of shots - the chip. Mr. Hackett (who is giving these lessons free of charge in the interest of Irish golf) has organized his class on mass-production lines. And his pupils think it's the finest way of spending an afternoon.

Here's how it's done - by the master himself. What a pity that Hackett plans to retire soon! Irish golf needs men like him!
