LONDON FIRE BRIGADE DISPLAY

The signal to open up is flagged from a bridge over the Serpentine and from 200 fire pumps is hurled a solid wall of water at the rate of nearly 68,000 gallons in a minute. Mr. Attlee, for whose benefit the demonstration was given lends a hand as men of the London Fire Brigade and Auxiliary Fire Service lining both banks send a cascade of water shooting into the air. A really spectacular display which lacked only one thing, they should have had a band playing "Hydrant (I dreamt) I dwelt in marble halls"!
