CANADIAN COMMANDER IN CHIEF IN FRANCE.

A few days ago we were shouting Hurray.... the Canadians are here. But before we've had time to say how do you do... they're over there. Led by their Commander in Chief, Major General Andrew McNaughton, the first contingent is landing in France. They came across the Atlantic to do a fighting job, and it hasn't taken them long to get down to it.

As soon as he arrives on the Western front, Major General McNaughton has a look round a British Sector. There isn't much fighting going on, so the tanks stage a little war of their own for their distinguished visitor. These are Britain's latest light tanksand they symbolise the efficiency of the modern B.E.F.

and now that you have seen them at speed come aboard for the Tanks Grand National. With a roar of war machines, the B.E.F. welcomes the Canadians and their leaders. .
