"NORA" RUNS AMOK.

After the Dutch steamship NORA had struck a mine off the South East Coast... she was towed in and beached. This unfortunately was not the end of the story;... as the rising tide lifted her from the beach and the heavy seas drove her against the pier. The force of the impact, was too much for the structure... and the little vessel (only three hundred and fifty tons) crashed right through, leaving a gap of about seventy feet. Once again she went ashore, and now lies high and nearly dry, and has become a source of amusement to many of the local inhabitants. "NORA" has run amok for the last time.
