

2-13-47 19

TANKS IN THE DESERT.

Landships of the armoured Corps are "ships of the desert" for the moment. They're on manoeuvres in Egypt...

There are very few obstacles to be negotiated and the same raises a dust, which is in itself, the perfect camouflage...

Signals Division receives, and delivers messages from Head Quarters and now the troops learn that they are to be relieved by the Egyptian Camel Corps.

The Camel detachment makes contact with the tanks - a strange mixture of ancient and modern military transport.

Sergeants of both Corps, crawl forward. And the Tank sergeant points out to the Camel N.C.O., the tactical features of the position. The new troops take over, and the tanks move off, for duty elsewhere.

Cairo! The capital of modern Egypt. Today, its ancient street echo with strange voices, for some of the Anzacs are taking a look round. A cab drive helps them, to make the most of their leave time. And a stroll through the Bazaar quarter gives them something more to write home about!