

ST. PATRICKS DAY.

The London Irish Rifles celebrate Ireland's Saints Day, with the traditional "wearing of the Green" Sorigs of Shamrock are distributed to the troops by General Sir Charles Harington. Everyone present wears the national emblem with pride. (Did I say everyone?)

Serry Old Chap!

For the information of those who are not versed in Irish History, St. Patrick, according to legend, adopted the favoyred little phant as the national emblem of Ireland, when he went there, to preach christianity.

The day's proceedings close with General, Sir Charles Harington, taking the salute at the March Past.

MING BACK AT THE ZOO.

Ming, the Giant Panda, is very naughty - - She was evacuated to Whipsnade on the outbreak of war, and now, like a lot of naughty people we know, she has returned. (Found the "call of the city" too strong I suppose). There's no greater favourite with the public, although she's no longer a baby! Two hundred pounds of lovable mischievousness, up to all the playfulness in the world.

Ming's fans will welcome her return, but that doesn't make her any less naughty!
