

Their Majesties with the Army.

The King is at Shorncliffe Camp, where he sees Engineers practising bridge building.

Later His Majesty makes history. He becomes the first reigning sovereign for almost a hundred years, to visit Dover Castle. Centuries ago it was Dover that played its part, against the danger of invasion by Napoleon. Today the King is received by Lord Willington, as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. For Dover is still important, in the defence of the Homeland.

Meanwhile the Queen inspects a Battalion of the London Scottish, of which regiment she is honorary Colonel. Her Majesty finds that two thirds of the battalion are in battle dress, the rest are in kilts. But the Queen remarks to the Commanding Officer that she hopes soon they'll all be wearing the kilt. For tradition means so much to a regiment, and the tradition of Scotland is strong.
