

SUNKEN SHIPS RAISED.

With so many ships going to the bottom, its quite a change to see somebody bringing something up. Excuse us Mrs. Brown, we've just stepped off the boat. In the ~~mouth~~ mouth of France's River Seine, the HELEMAQUE has been lying on the bottom for a hundred and fifty years.

The atory goes that she was carrying a load of stolen treasure, when she fled from France. So raising her should be a paying job.

Although they look very carefully, the French boys find no trace of the treasure. Better luck next time.

IN South Africa, they're raising the old fishing trawler PICKLE, and considering she's been rubbing noses with Davy Jones for eight months, she's in pretty good condition. But the smell of her...phew. Pass me the lavender water.

And way... she's glad to be away from the bottom of the ocean, down there she never knew when a Nazi waeship mightn't come scuttling down on top of her.
