VICTIM OF BLACK OUT AT SEA.

The S. S. Greystone Castle is laid up in dry dock... after an accident off the South African Coast, when she rammed and sank another ship in the pitch black of the night.

Look at the scar in the gash that was torn in the side of the Greystone Castle, when her starboard anchor and chain was ripped clean off.

She was carrying a cargo of Latex, pure white rubber in liquid form, but when the salt water got into the Greystone Castle, the Latex formed a solid mass. Now the only way to remove the cargo is to perform an operation on the ship, by opening her side.

Then they hack out the rubber with huge hatchets knives, when the pieces fall on the quay, they make it look like a field of virgin snow. But you only need to take one sniff at that Latex, to know it... well... not snow.

Any man who can do that without holding his nose is a hero.
