FOXHUNT IN U.S.

Foxhunting in the real old English style comes to America. They've imported some hounds, they've imported a fox. Most of the riders have never ridden to hound before, but they're going to have a darned good try. So they head up the trail to the point where they turn ol' brer fox loose. The pack picks up the scent and the hunt is on. The fox runs for his life, the hunters run for exercise, some of them may be trying to get there before the hounds, but a good time is being had by all. So yorks and tally-ho resound through the rancho country, even though they don't all stay on. But no bones are broken and the fox just sits up and laughs and laughs.
