THE FLEET IN ALEXANDRIA.

From every part of the Empire comes news of more Allied preparedness. Powerful units of the British and French Fleets have arrived in Egypt's Northern Base. They are ready for any extension of the war... to the hitherto peaceful waters of the Mediterranean.

Almost immediately, with reconnaissance planes overhead...

the fleet goes out on manoeuvres. This movement of our fleets are no threat to any nation, or the freedom of any people. Here as everywhere else.... the power of the Allies is a stabilising factor for peace.
