

HELP FOR HOLLAND.

These pictures were taken at a French Port while troops were embarking for a corner of South Western Holland, to cover evacuation.

A whole convey of troopships is about to sail Northwards. But even as the troopships are moving out of harbour, Nazi reconnaissance^s planes spot the convey.

French gunners take up action stations, they knew that the Nazi Bombers will soon follow. And now we show you the attack in the North Sea. There's the bomber, and here are the bombs, wide of the mark.

More German bombers, and now watch the white pillars, as the bombers miss again.

And yet another attack.

But not one of the bombs find its mark.....

and soon the French Troops are steaming towards the South Western Coast of Holland.

If Hitler thinks it will be easy, to build bases for his submarines and planes, along the Dutch Coast, he'd better think again.

As long as our men can fight....and our guns can fire.... we shall harrass that coast, and make it untenable for the enemy.
