

40/49

EVACUATING THE CHILDREN.

For the second time in this war...and to another hundred and twenty thousand of them... comes the great adventure. So its goodbye to the cities and danger areas. Labelled and loaded... and not forgetting their gas masks.... the children head for the special trains. And they're not worrying... they're off for a holiday,

These mass movements of our children are the greatest tribute in the world... to the British way of life.

Even in the midst of the storm and stress of battle... in the midst of the greatest war effort this country has ever known... we don't forget the safety of our children... on whom the future of our race depends. Humanity still plays a part in our life... even though some other nations may have forgotten what humanity is.

So they reach the fresh air...and the wide green fields of the country.... to find new experiences, new homes, new friends, and for the time being a new life.

Fortunately they don't realize the realities of war.