THE NAVY ON LAND.

All aboard for a trip along the coast! Jack Tar is prepared for anything, afloat or ashore - - and, of course, he jumps to it "at the double". (It's a way they have in the Navy). If trouble threatens, sailors will man land ships, (They're lorries to <sup>us</sup> landlubbers), and it's "full steam ahead" for the scene of the bother. Jack Tar's usefulness on the high seas is well known, but he's just as good on terra firma and I don't mean "perhaps".

So the Navy goes "looking for trouble", and woe betide any who try to poach on its preserves.

In other days Jack came ashore for a rest - (and anything else that was going), but now it's different. It's duty all the time.
