An American Bomber brings the Duke of Kent on another of his visits to the R.A.F. At this aerodrome he sees the new Douglas Dive Bombers and meets experts in the technique of bumping-off Bosche bombers.

Newsreel cameramen have a lot to do these days, so we'll pass on to take a look at another airforce stronghold where Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester arrives to inspect a section of the W.R.A.F.

The W.R.A.F.'s march past with fine soldier-like bearing, and leave us to travel up North to where Their Majesties see some of our officer cadets in training with their guns.

Close interest is expressed in the heavy artillery School. A demonstration with the gun crews going into action gives a realistic impression of how these monsters spring to life.

Their Majesties tour affords them a representative picture of the North's war activities and they are delighted with the efficiency displayed by all.
