U. BOAT ATTACKED.

Further proof that Britannia still rules the waves. All these ships are sailing the seas under the protection of the Royal Navy, assisted in this particular instance by a Polish Destroyer.

A plane has spotted a submarine lurking in the depths. She signals the protecting Naval Craft, and drops a smoke bomb to indicate the position of the U. Boat. To the Polish ship falls the honour of attacking the enemy, while the British naval vessels keep their eyes on the convoy. And that's the first pill!

And now for a big one... Watch!

And from aircraft and ship they watch a patch of oil spreading on the surface of the sea. It means that another enemy submarine has gone to join the others in Davy Jones' Locker. It also means that yet another convoy makes port safely, thanks to the Royal Navy and our Allies.
