

PATHE GAZETTE: 40/78.

WOMEN ROOF SPOTTERS & WOMAN FARMER

Anxious to play their part in the nation's cause, girls of an East Coast town have gathered themselves together to act as "Jim Crow's" counterpart in roof spotting. Part of their training is to know the various types of enemy aircraft. These good lookers fit themselves out in warm hooded coats for protection against approaching storms. Clothing like this is essential when the job means standing on a chilly rooftop scanning the skies. Don't forget - winter draws on! In the factory and workshops of our cities and towns men must work while women must peep. The wheels of industry keep turning as these girls get right on top of their job.

In the country to where farmer's wives have ever done their share of harvesting and tilling, the women folk are working to get more land under cultivation. Dad is a Home Guardsman as well as a farmer. To get to their place you go down the lane past the Messerschmidt, keep right and right on past the wreckage of two Dorniers. Back home on the farm the youngsters look after the housework. Britain's young and old are working their way to victory.