SHELTERS PLEASE, MR. MORRISON

Mr. Herbert Morrison, new Minister of Home Security, and Admiral Sir Edward Evans, make a tour of East London shelters. A raid is on but they go through it quite unperturbed to see how things are. So that's not to be used, eh. Good old Herb as they affectionately call him and Evans of the Broke have other ideas. After a talk with officials that shelter can and will be converted to a comfortable refuge. The welfare of Londoners with no shelters of their own is in good hands and the people of the East End know something will be done. No need for them to shelter behind red tape.
