CLEAR BOYS... CLEAR.

Clear boys, clear. That's a darned good motto for the Pioneers and Royal Engineers who are tidying up London. With picks, spades, drills and other paraphernalia, they are hard at work on the most severely bombed areas. These stalwart tommies make light of tasks which would remind us of the morning after a day at weeding the lawn: curbing our enthusiasm for gardening.

These chaps may not always call a spade a spade, but spade (or something) shovel or sledgehammer, all are the same to them. Some of them are Londoners who have been brought back from distant stations for this work. And are they glad to be back in "dear old smoke"?....Come on Hitler!
