THE KING WITH FIRE FIGHTERS.

To the London Fire Brigade at Lambeth comes His Majesty the King on a visit to the headquarters of our heroic fire fighters. During the raids on London the work of the fire brigades has won universal admiration. Regulars and A.F.S. men and women are in the forefront of the aerial Battle of London and no praise is too high for them.

The King is proud of their magnificent record, and finally sees engines "tuen out" for yet another call.

Scenes such as these have kept our fire fighters hard at it night and day. Scenes following the indiscriminate bombing and burning of civilian homes and other non-military objectives. We should be failing in our duty if we omitted to refer to the growing demand throughout the country for real reprisals. We cannot help saying how we long for the day when we can report, that Britain feels no longer bound to deal with the ruthless sky-murderers as though they were an honourable foe; when we can show that Germany has been compelled to swallow large doses of her own medicine.
