HOLLAND FIGHTS ON.

Into the historic old castle at Cape Town, so much associated with the sailing-vessel days of the Dutch East India Company, came a party of modern Dutchmen as gallant as any crew that pioneered the sea-route to the Cape. They're from a Cruiser of the Royal Dutch Navy recently in South African waters, and, though their homeland is under the Nazi heel, they are fighting on!

Cape Town gives these undaunted seamen the warmhearted welcome they so well and truly deserve. A civic luncheon is held in their honour, and among the guests are many members of the Cabinet.

There's a little difference between this modern greyhound of war and those early merchant ships from Holland that lay in this bay, but their purposes are somewhat linked. Those ships of yesterday brought civilisation to South Africa, this Cruiser is helping to defend it. Holland will never be conquered, she still fights on.
