IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

From the cockpit of one of our patrolling aircraft in the Mediterranean, a British Destroyer is seen on duty off Gibraltar.

Observers in the air, and on the sea, are on the look out for a suspected enemy submarine. High over the blue waters of the Rock the Pilot spots his prey, an Italian submarine just asking for trouble.

The destroyer and aircraft go into action as signals are exchanged by lamp.

Now here's your chance to see an Italian War Vessel run for its life. He's cramming on every ounce of speed to escape the Depth charges which the Destroyer has ready, as it races after him. The Italian bolts for the cover of Spanish Territorial waters, in the true tradition of its Nagy, and the pilot sees the luckless Destroyer swing hard over as the submarine reaches the safety of the harbour at Tangier. The incident may end there; but so far as the Navy's concerned, its only started.
