NAZI SPIES' RADIO SET.

The two German spies who were executed in London, had in their possession this portable wireless transmitting set. The two Nazi's were caught, shortly after their secret landing in this country. Their instructions were to erect the midget transmitter in the fields, at night and tap out information gathered from casual conversations about troop movements, situation of aerodromes, and so on. Posing as Refugees from enemy occupied territory they planned to send their messages under cover of darkness. Keep a look out for such sneaks. Stowed away in the portable containers are the aerial, batteries, the single Telefunken valve, a morse tapper, and a transmitter weighing 16 ~~many~~ ounces. All the equipment bears German lettering. The spies had had been made to believe that they would shortly be relieved by German invading forces. Another of Hitler's unfulfilled promises.
