MEXICAN HORSEMANSHIP

Henry A. Wallace, United States Envoy to Mexico City, watches a grand show in horsemanship by the cadets of the Military Academy. As an example of hard training and perfect co-ordination between man and beast, you have to go along way to beat it. Some of these trick riders can stand where some can't even sit, but it doesn't always come off. But for the really fancy work, what about this? Does he love horses, he just throws both arms around its neck. This cadet may have come from a one-horse town, look at him now. Here's the famous pyramid, the pride of the school.
