THE WAR IN ALBANIA.

Visiting time at a Military hospital in Athens, when wounded Greek soldiers are given all sorts of good things. Flowers, Cigarettes, Sweets and fruit galore are brought by good hearted people, who may stay long enough to help consume them. Its an old hospital custom.

In the hospital grounds, walking cases take a constitutional with the nurses. These are men who took part in the victorious battles of Koritza, Pogradets, Argyrokastro, Kimara, and Klisura. Communiques displayed in the streets of Athens announce more successes and flags, banners and all the paraphernalia of a victory celebration are brought out again, as crowds of cheering, happy Athenians throng the streets to give expression to their high spirits.

A British airman is carried shoulder high. The R.A.F. Man is given the cheers which symbolise gratitude to Britain.

Greek troops passing through on a lorry come in for a lot of hero worship. They might well be singing "It's not a long way to Tepelini."
