

NAVY PLANE CRASH

Ensign Robert Winston and Mechanic Moroni, make ready for a routine flight, just part of a day's work, nothing more. Bit of a nice day for it. Winston's at the controls, and they take off. The landing gear jams, one wheel won't function. Might be trouble when they try to land. The crash crew is called out. Fire fighter and shore rescue, a diver in case the craft falls into the sea. A coastguard plane goes up to see if anything can be done to loosen the gear. Rescue boats take up their positions. Pilot Winston who has dropped notes asking what he should do is ordered to come down in Jamaica Bay and that's just what he does - in a land plane mind you. That's a real flying test if ever there was one. Well, thanks to cool heads and good nerves, they are safe and sound. They've come out of a nasty jam with flying colours.
