SPRINGBOKS TREK NORTH.

The constant stream of South Africa's fighting men goes on. Springboks disembark from troop ships and prepare for the long trek northwards to join their comrades in the great battles of North Africa. Meantime, their destination is a large comfortable camp - a base from which they will later proceed on their way to help in the fight for freedom.

Sir Henry Moore, Governor of Kenya comes to welcome them on behalf of His Majesty the King. Its not long before the men get down to useful work. Whilst the army looks to the North - the cooks face the Yeast. Being short of dough is a common complaint in the Army - the cooks are more fortunate - they make it. At a look-out post, keen eyes watch for enemy aircraft. When the alarm is raised, it doesn't take them long to get ~~into~~ into action. Its a reminder that they're nearing their destination - they're on the fringe of the battle zone.

At an aerodrome nearby - a pilot takes off on reconnaissance. Prying Italian aircraft are not welcome here. The last time a Caproni came snooping around - this is what heppened to it.

When the order comes to break camp - these seasoned campaigners go forward to add more glory to the traditions of the "Fighters of the Veldt".
