SOUTH AFRICA'S HOME GUARD.

The streets of Johannesburg echo to the sound of martial feet, as four thousand men of the Mines Engineering Brigade march through the city. They're not able to enlist for full time service, so they've been formed into the Home Guard.

At the Wanderer's Ground, General Smuts, the Prime Minister, takes the salute, and afterwards inspects the parade. Though the men are only able to spare a little time for training, they're remarkably smart and efficient.

The General congratulates them on their fine bearing. The Home - front in South Africa, as in Britain, is in safe hands.
