

SOUTH AFRICA'S NEW AIR SERVICE.

At the inauguration of a new South African Air-Service, the British Airways Flying Boat CASTOR glides over Vaaldam.
 Government Ministers are present as a new page in the history of African Transportation is opened. On the placid waters of the Dam rides the graceful silver grey machine, while onlookers let fly a few adjectives about the weather. A bi-weekly service will link Durban with Lourenzo Marques in Portuguese East Africa.

Vaaldam is also being used as a training base for British Airways personnel. So now, the Transvaal is linked to the rest of the Empire by flying boat, and she's training the men who will pilot the machines.