THE STUFF TO GIVE 'EM.

Behind the cover of hedgerows along an English Country lane, stalks a Tommy Gun section. On the other side in the open, Bren-Gun-Barriers are speeding up to attack. Once again we show you how all branches of the Army maintain their proficiency and harden themselves for the rigours of war.

The gap between attacked and attacker narrows as the carriers come to a halt, and the men rush forward under fire to form a line.

Elsewhere bayonet practice is in progress on a grand scale. The British soldier is no mean exponent in the art of bayonet duelling. Our forefathers made history with the sabre, cutlass, claymore, and rapier, and today we are still second to none in fighting with cold steel at close quarters. That's the stuff to give 'em lads!

Irrespective of all modern machines and instruments of war, the bayonet still remains a weapon guaranteed to strike ~~gt~~ terror into any enemy. Little can be more demoralising than the sight of hundreds of shouting men charging to the skirl of the pipes behind a wall of deadly steel.
