CANADIAN SPOTTERS.

Canadian air gunners keep their eyes and trigger fingers in fighting trim, with a work-out on a twin-barrel gun mounted for ground target practice. These men belong to the Canadian Squadron of the newly formed Army Co-operation Command R.A.F; flying Westland Lysanders. Their job puts them in the front line of invasion when the head Nazi feels in the mood. High above the clouds in their "Lizzies" - these spotters act as eyes for the Army... while down below, Canadian mechanics at a fighter squadron, service Hurricane aircraft for the day and night-long warfare that goes on in the air.

With the grace of birds and the speed of bullets two flights of Hurricanes "peel off". Goering's Luftwaffe have something more coming to them.
