REALISTIC A.R.P. EXERCISES.

King Haakon of Norway, accompanied by Admiral Sir Edward Evans, arrives at a large factory in the London Area to witness a realistic display by the workers. The signal to action stations, brings the various A.R.P. Groups out at the double. Admiral Evans is able to show His Majesty how our industries mobilise their own Blitz-fighting machinery. Wearing Asbestos protective clothing, fire-fighters demonstrate a new-type of incendiary bomb extinguisher. It's a honey, and makes bomb-smuffing a pleasure. Home Guardsmen in the Factory have their own band; it's all part of the service.

The Auxiliary Fire Service personnel, not to be outdone, turn on a really spectacular display with their appliances.

Not the only high spot of the afternoon. King Haakon expresses admiration of their work. A Norwegian girl in national costume presents His Majesty with a gold watch to commemorate a happy and note-worthy occasion.
